DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

In response to amendment of claim 1, rejection under 112 has been withdrawn.

Rejections - 35 USC § 102

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

1. Claims 1 and 16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Ganthier et al (5,865,546).

As to claims 1, 16, Ganthier et al. discloses a computer user interface device, a keyboard module / a first module for producing keyboard function signals based on user input operations (figs.1, 3 (130)), a specialty module/second module cooperative couple to said keyboard module for producing a specialized set of user function signals based on user input operations (fig. 1,3 (102, 140, 160)), circuitry, on said specialty module, for coupling the signals to the computer (fig.3 (99)).

As to claim 5 Ganthier et al further teaches a the keyboard module includes a mechanical coupling structure (fig.1 (105,107)) and the specialty module includes a mechanical coupling structure (fig.1 (113,134)) complementary with the mechanical coupling structure on the keyboard module.

As to claims 6,15, Ganthier et al also show one of the mechanical coupling structures includes a cavity for keyboard and specialty module (fig. 1(104, 110, 120)).

In regard to 7, Ganthier et al further teaches the mechanical coupling structures include electrical connectors (figs.1 and 4 (125), fig.3 (105,111,121,115)(85-88)).

As to claim 10, Ganthier et al also disclose that the computer user interface device is one of a computer keyboard (see, figs.1 and 4 (130)).

As to claim 11, Ganthier et al discloses the keyboard module (fig.1 (130)). It is inherent for Ganthier et al's keyboard to have a cursor keys and programmable function keys.

In regard to claim 12, Ganthier et al shows the mechanical coupling structure includes a guide rails (fig.1 (106)) and guide slots (fig.1, (105,113,123)).

As to claim 13, Ganthier et al further teaches a locking structure for locking the keyboard module and specialty module (fig. 1(107, 106, 131), fig. 4,(135, 136)).

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Art Unit: 2673

3. Claim 14 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Ganthier et al in view of Daly et al (4,969,830).

As to claim 14, Ganthier et al discloses a computer interface including a keyboard module and specialty module (see, figs.1 and 4), but failed to teach these two modules having a snap lock. Daly et al is cited to teach that it is well known for a computer interface device to have a snap locking mechanism (see, Abstract, col.1, lines 54-65). Therefore, it would have been obvious to one skill in the art at the time of the invention was made to have been motivated to incorporate the locking system of Daly et al into the computer interface device of Ganthier et al, because this will provide an automatically effects engagement of the keyboard and the specialty modules a secured connection.

Response to Arguments

4. Applicant's arguments with respect to claims 1, 6 and 14 have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.
